Republican Leaders Plan To Get Decision Of Harding At First Hand Immediately Upon His Arrival At White House From South- ern Trip

WASHINGTON, Mar. 17.—The soldier bonus problem is back again to day with President Harding.

After twenty-four hours of doubt, indecision and battling with baffling cross currents in the house, the Republican leaders determined today they could do no more until they shall have conferred with the president and heard at first hand his decision.

They will go to the white house, Mondell, Fordney, Longworth and others, just as soon as the president will receive them following his return from Florida. They hope he will accept the bonus plan that has been presented to the house by an overwhelming, favorable vote from the ways and means committee. If he rejects it, there seems no way but postponement and despair, for the November elections will follow such action. Leaders see no hope in a house conference of house Republicans that has been demanded by bonus advocates. Representative Towner says they can order me to call a conference, "but I can set the date for it. There will be a conference with President Harding as soon as he gets back. It may be there will be no need for further conferences."

The proposed conference was promoted by Representative Lineberger, Republican, California, an advocate of a sales tax to pay a cash soldiers' bonus. The Ways and Means committee wrestled along with the tax problem and abandoned it finally. It is stated that no tax plan can get thru the house. Proponents of the proposed legislation claim they produced a schedule whereby, without extra taxation the soldiers can get a bonus and immediate money to meet their needs. It grew out of the general house demand for bonus legislation and the conflicting conditions imposed by the president that there should be no bonus without a sales tax.

FRANCIS HAY TAKES CHARGE OF TRIBUNE CLASSIFIED PAGE

There is a marked change for the better in business conditions. More people are willing to buy and, consequently, there are more opportunities to sell, than there have been for two years past.

Don't overlook this fact and don't overlook the possibilities of the classified page of The Tribune & Times-Age as a business getter. The classified page is the cheapest and most direct medium between buyer and seller in the world. Most people realize this, but because it is cheap and simple they forget it.

As a means of promoting service of this kind The Tribune & Times-Age has employed Francis Hay to take charge of the classified page and he will devote his entire time to promotional work thru the medium of that page.

There is no page in the paper so thoroughly read. There is no page that contains so much of human interest. Under the direction of Mr. Hay it will take on added interest and become of greater service to all classes of readers.

There is no greater convenience than the classified section of a newspaper. It is the one medium thru which the general public can always secure the gratification of its wants. Try it out. It will both save and make you money.

BANDITS SHOW A FELLOW FEELING FOR GAME VICTIM

CINCINNATI, O., Mar. 17.—As the auto of Shelby Stevens stopped in Clifton early this morning when the gasoline supply ran out, two bandits stepped from the curb and pointed revolvers at Stevens.

They searched his pockets taking $195 and checks for $55. "Have a heart," Stevens appealed to the bandits. "I am out of gas and money too."

"Sure," replied one of the hold-up men. "This ought to fill the tank."

Then he handed a ten dollar bill to Stevens. Both the bandits then hurried away.

UNTUTORED YOUTH FACES DEATH WITH GREAT PHILOSOPHY

WASHINGTON, Mar. 17.—John McHenry, the 22-year-old Washington youth was hanged in the district jail at 10:40 o'clock this morning for the murder of a Washington garage owner and a policeman.

Chief Justice McCoy denied a further reprieve at 10 o'clock this morning. Dispatches from St. Augustine said President Harding would not intercede to save the boy.

(A week ago, John McHenry, 22-year-old youth, sentenced to hang at the national capital was granted a reprieve of one week to allow him to "prepare his soul." The week has passed. He died today on the gallows. In the following story McHenry told how he felt "about this hanging business."—Editor.)

WASHINGTON, Mar. 16.—Well, they've got me ready to die. The priest has got me reading the Bible. Some of it's good stuff all right. They hanged Jesus and he didn't kill anybody. They've got a right to kill me, I guess, but God oughtn't to let them kill Jesus. They kill you if you're good, and they kill you if you're bad. There's a lot of killing stuff in the Bible.

I'm glad they're going to kill me at last. It was no use keeping me alive. A fat chance I've got of going to heaven. Why didn't God give me a chance to make good here?

They never gave me a chance here, and I'm going to hell.

Well, let them send me to hell, I'll go there smiling. I'm going to the gallows smiling. Why shouldn't I smile?

Maybe they know how to treat kids better in hell than they do here. It can't be no worse than it is here.

I don't know why I've been a bad egg. I don't know a lot of things. I can't understand this God stuff. I don't know why they say they've got to kill me because I'm a bad egg and then tell me to pray seven days and God will forgive me. I didn't want to kill those men. I didn't want to kill anybody. Why didn't God give me a chance when I was a kid?

Why does he give me a chance just before I die?

I'd like to live so as to show them maybe I'm not such a bad egg after all. But what's the use.

I guess I'll hurt alright when they break my neck. A lot of people are coming to see them do it—well, I hope they'll enjoy it.

They're going to give me a good breakfast before they hang me. There's a lot of poor guys who are going to live who want a good breakfast.

Well, what's the use?

They hanged Jesus because he was good, and now they're going to hang me because I'm bad.

COSSACK LEADER TO BE KEPT OUT OF U. S.

WASHINGTON, Mar. 17.—The opinion that Gregory Semenov, Ataman of the Russian Cossacks and alleged "Butcher of the Far East" would be denied admission to the United States by the board which will act on his request at Victoria, was voiced here today.

Altho the state department stated that it has no objections to Semenov's admission, it was stated that the famous anti-Bolshevik leader will be looked on in the same light as any Russian immigrant.

WRESTLING CHAMP'S MANAGER WOULD PIT HIM AGAINST JACK DEMPSEY, TO FINISH Forfeit Of $5,000 Posted In Hope Of Arranging A Novel Battle To Decide Who Can Best Protect Himself — Wrestler. Or Boxer.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Mar. 17.—The controversy as to the ability of a wrestler to beat a boxer in a rough and tumble will, if Billy Sandow has his way be settled.

Sandow, manager of Ed Strangler Lewis, holder of the world's catch-as-catch-can wrestling championship today deposited a certified check for $5,000 with J. L. Ray, sports editor of the Nashville Banner and flung a challenge to Jack Dempsey, the world's heavy weight boxer.

He will, he said, forfeit the cash if Lewis fails to go thru with his part of the performance. He says he will deposit an additional $5,000 if Jack Kearns accepts the challenge.

Sandow declared Lewis would meet Dempsey in a ring of regulation size, Dempsey to come in bare-knuckled, and privileged to strike Lewis or wrestle him.

"Dempsey doesn't need to worry about no one to fight," said Sandow. "Lewis will meet him."

He expressed the belief that Lewis would beat Dempsey in twenty minutes.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY BRINGS MESSAGES FROM LEADERS OF EMANCIPATED ERIN

DUBLIN, Mar. 17.—St. Patrick's day this year finds Ireland under control of the Irish people for the first time in centuries. The political views of the Irish people differ, there is general rejoicing over the newly won freedom. The International News Service herewith presents St. Patrick's day messages to the American people from leaders representing all shades of public opinion.

Michael Collins, minister of finance in the Irish provisional government: "This year finds Ireland shaking off the strangle hold of English domination. Hitherto our work was to shake off England's grip. Now our work is to build up the Irish nation. We take up the work with the same zest we had in the former task. It is not less noble nor arduous. The Irish people express to their friends and kinsmen in the United States appreciation for their generous assistance in the past. The friendship between the two countries will continue. Ireland assures the American people their friendship will be justified."

Arthur Griffith, president of the government: "Henceforth the national Feast Day found Ireland sinking further into ruin. This year there are signs everywhere of the substantial freedom which Ireland gains under the peace treaty. Henceforth Ireland's destiny is in the hands of the Irish people who are determined to undo the ruin that has been wrought and build up a free and prosperous Ireland, that the friends in the United States may look on with pride. We are happy to thank the American people for their support, and on St. Patrick's day, 1922, the hopes of the American people are beginning to be realized."

Countess Markiewicz, supporter of Eamonn DeValera, in his fight against the Irish treaty: "St. Patrick's day this year finds Ireland facing a situation that will test every nerve and fiber of those loyal to the republic. An organized army of Irish women have pledged their loyalty to the republic they love. Nothing will daunt them. They stand true to the tricolor and will do so until the republic takes her place among the sister nations."

Allice Stopford, the Green Portress of the Irish women who supported the treaty: "There is but one voice in this country this St. Patrick's day. It is in praise of the women of Ireland whose patriotic experiences and comradeship in war will affect the future life of the Irish nation."

Thomas Johnson, leader of the Irish labor party: "The St. Patrick's day message from the workers of Ireland to the workers of America must be a plea that you should demand the release of Irish political prisoners and particularly the release of James Larkin, who is now serving time in a New York state prison."

Eamonn DeValera refused to make a statement on the ground it might be construed as disconcerting to Griffith.

WASHINGTON, Mar. 17.—The high cost of living is coming down slowly. The retail cost of food was three-tenths of one per cent lower in February than it was in January, according to figures made public today by the department of labor.

The increase was most pronounced among farm products and foodstuffs. Some of the more pronounced decreases in retail food prices in February were evaporated milk, fresh milk, oleomargarine, strictly fresh eggs, bread and some canned foods.

Sixteen articles increased in price during the month, the most important being onions.

BLACK LABOR AND WAGE CUT CAUSE OF REBELLION IN AFRICAN COLONY

BY W. N. EWER

LONDON, March 17.—While South African government troops are breaking the last resistance of the Rand general strike and their allied commandos, the outbreaks of fantastic stories are apparently designed to pave the way for drastic measures of reprisal. Some of these stories are to the effect that the strikers' course was inspired and financed by "Moscow" in an attempt to paralyze one of the financial nerve centers of the world. The stories represent the strikers as savage maniacs engaged in wholesale massacres of the natives.

The facts are these: The so-called revolt began last January as a result of the men's refusal to accept the demands of the mine owners for reductions in wages and for the replacement of large numbers of white workers by low paid black labor. During January the negotiations proceeded in the Rand in absolutely orderly fashion. Nevertheless large numbers of armed police were drafted. Johannesburg papers began (Continued on Page Eight)

The Circus People
By MARVIN ST. JOHNS
Copyright, 1932, Western Newspaper Union.
"It's a sinful shame!" declared prim, straight-laced Miss Tabitha Duncan. "Aunt Lucia must have taken leave of her senses!" chorused Bart Duncan, her nephew.
The criticisms were not generous. Both were pensioners on the bounty of Miss Lucia Warden, age thirty-five, looking ten years younger, and, although missing most of the joys of life, by no means sour, and still hoping and longing that some day Love would come along and help fill out her lonely life.
She had given Miss Duncan a home, she had a checkbook.
For this reason any dereliction from personal or household rules was viewed with concern by the twin of selfish time-servers. What had aroused their present consternation was the fact that Lucia had not only allowed a traveling circus to show on a lot she owned, but had visited it several times.
"It's just terrible, Bart," pronounced the agitated Tabitha. "Bart, I believe that Lucia has fallen in love!"
"Incredible!" he gasped.
"It's true. It seems that those two little acting girls are under the charge of a man calling himself Henry Morton. He used to be a balloon acrobat, but had a bad fall. His brother, now dead, was also an actor, and had trained the children. Morton is traveling with them as their guardian. I won't say that he is not a polite, dignified gentleman, but he has fascinated Lucia, and I hate him. Well, that isn't the worst of it."
"What next?"
"Why, somehow the two children have caught the measles and can't go on with the show. Morton has canceled their contract and Lucia, soft-hearted Lucia, has turned the house into a hospital."
"You don't mean to say that she has taken those two children?"
"Yes, I do, and Morton is there, too, helping nurse them."
It was all true. Without pausing to analyze feelings or motives, Lucia Warden had drifted into a new environment.
Never had an ingenuous, true-souled little woman more appreciative friends. After the hardship, uncertainties and discomfort of half a season of roughing it with the circus, the little children snuggled down in the pretty, cozy home of Miss Lucia like birds housed in a cherished nest.
Their uncle would scarcely leave their presence. His ministrations were assiduous and untiring. When Lucia came into the sick room, a sort of glorified contentment came into his bronzed, serious face.
Lucia learned the history of the little ones, left under a year's contract with the circus company, with which their father and uncle had been connected.
"That is all over now," Morton told her, with profound satisfaction. "It has been a providence that their illness came at a time when your kind heart opened the doors of your beautiful home to the homeless and distressed."
He told her how he had never married because of the hard round of duties, the broken fortunes of his brother and his family had required.
And then one evening, as they sat in the glow of the firelight and the shaded lamps, the little ones asleep in each other's arms, like cherubs, Henry Morton boldly, bravely told this superb friend that he loved her.
She was waiting for the declaration, for she was hoping for it.
"We must do something!" declared Miss Tabitha to her nephew two days later, when she learned how matters stood.
Morton had gone away to close out a little piece of property he owned at a distance.
"Leave it to me," replied Bart, after he had gained every detail he could as to the past life and antecedents of Morton.
Four days later he sent for Miss Tabitha in great excitement and exultation of spirits.
"I've got him!" he chuckled. "That hint you had about his living at a certain town five years ago has brought results. I wrote to a law firm there. They sent me a photograph of him. Look there!"
Triumphantly, he handed to his relative a photograph. It pictured Henry Morton—only in a convict's suit.
Henry Morton had just returned to the village as Bart and his aunt appeared.
"I have come upon a solemn mission," said Bart. "Aunt Lucia, this man is an ex-convict!"
The astonished Lucia took the proffered photograph. With supreme confidence in her face she handed it to Mr. Morton.
"My friends," said the latter with a pitying smile, "you seem to have happened across a picture of mine taken when I was an actor in a stage drama. As to the 'convict' you refer to, that alludes to some financial troubles of my dead brother."
Miss Tabitha thought it best to plant herself with another relative. Bart sneaked into obscurity. As to Lucia, Mr. Morton and the little ones—they became part and parcel of the happiest family circle in all Christendom.

ATHENS, Mar. 16.—Within a space of ten years, Dr. W. K. Lim, a young Chinaman, left his home in Sumatra, came to America, graduated from Ohio University here, in 1916, where he was a member of the Phi Kappa Tau fraternity, then graduated from a Detroit medical school and now, is a recognized authority on radiography. He has just left here after a short visit. He expects to board a vessel Saturday to visit his old home in Sumatra.

POMEROY, Mar. 16.—Tom Saftroed lost an arm and Delmar Alexander an eye at Portland, due to an explosion of a stick of dynamite. The men were about to explode the dynamite from a skiff in the Ohio river. Just as the stick was to be thrown into the water something happened. Both men grabbed the explosive just as it exploded.

BUCHTEL, Mar. 16.—Dry officers, making a moonshine raid on the home of John Rife, miner, found a sad state of affairs. In the four room home were Rife, his wife and their 12 children, all sleeping in five beds. The children range from 22 to 2 years of age. There was hardly a bit of furniture in the house, aside from the beds. The officers found a barrel of mash. The mother sent two of her little daughters to an outbuilding where they got the coils of two stills. Rife told the officials that he had been idle so long he was desperate and started to operate a still to earn money to feed his big family. Some of the youngsters, probably, will be placed in the children's home.

RUTLAND, Mar. 16.—District school superintendent Will Merritt is meeting with success in his "home work" campaign in several northern Meigs county townships. In this drive, credit is given pupils who help about their homes. Doing the chores, washing dishes, cleaning and mending—all have their credits. A diploma is given the pupil who reaches the 500 credit mark. Parents are reported as being "strong" for Supt. Merritt's plan.

BUCYRUS, Mar. 16.—Miss Jennie Kimerline, clerk of the board of education at New Washington, Crawford, is advertising for bids on a new consolidated school building there, on April 11. Bonds, aggregating $200,000, have been issued to defray the cost of construction.

Sentiment and the Law
By DOROTHY WHITCOMB
Copyright, 1932, Western Newspaper Union
"But law and sentiment are the same thing," said Rogers the old corporation lawyer. Somebody had been lamenting the average jurymen's liability to bring in a verdict upon the evidence alone. "Sentiment is law," Rogers repeated. "It is law in its embryonic state, uncrystallized, but often better law than written codes."
"Do any of you remember the Bright murder trial of the late seventies?" he continued, looking round at us. "No? Well, there have been many murders since then, and doubtless it was not of epoch-making importance. Yet I was led to undertake the defense of Howard Bright through sentiment."
"It was pretty Lorna Bright, the cousin of the young man, and secretly engaged to him, who persuaded me, by her protestations of Howard's innocence, to undertake so desperate a case. Old Charles Bright had driven his son from his home, because he preferred the life of a musician."
"Charles Bright was one of those cantankerous old men who are cordially hated by their neighbors. He had a big estate at Lunark, Md., to which he retired after having disposed of the business which he hoped Howard would inherit, at a price of two or three hundred thousands. Among those who hated him most strongly was Pete Jones, a small farmer whose lands he had taken when a mortgage fell due."
"Now we come to the murder. On Thanksgiving eve, 1875, the servants of the old man were aroused by a cry and the sound of a shot. They ran out of the house and saw their master lying dead with a bullet wound through his head. Some fifty yards away stood Howard, a rifle in his hands. He made no resistance and was arrested and duly committed for trial."
"As I said, gentlemen, it was Lorna Bright who insisted that I undertake her cousin's defense. She had been in the house at the time of the murder and had known no more than the servants; yet she was confident that her cousin was guiltless."
"Howard's story was that he had come home on Thanksgiving eve, to seek a reconciliation; that he had brought an old rifle he had taken away, with a view of joining his father duck shooting on the Potomac, a sport to which the old man was very partial, and in which he always used a rifle. When he was within fifty yards of the house, however, he heard a rifle discharged in the distance and saw his father, who had been standing near the door, fall forward dead."
"I was convinced of the young man's innocence by my first interview with him. I assumed that Jones was the guilty man. Jones was at this time living in a cabin about fifteen hundred yards from the site of old Bright's house. There seemed no way in which Jones could be trapped."
"All at once I had an idea. The body had not yet been buried, though the inquest was over. It occurred to me that a bullet fired at such a short range would have had velocity enough to have drilled a clean instead of a jagged hole in the head. I examined the wound and found, not only that the wound was hopelessly torn, so far as measuring its size went, but that, instead of being parallel with the earth, or horizontal, it had a downward angle of some 35 degrees."
"That discovery sent me wild with eagerness. It was easy to deduce from this that the bullet had been fired from a considerable distance. As you doubtless know, gentlemen, at all but point blank ranges the sight on the rifle is elevated, so that the ball, in its trajectory, takes first an upward and then a downward course. In other words, I had here a triangle, one angle of which measured 35 degrees, and the base line, as I surmised, about 1,500 yards—that is to say, the distance between the murdered man and Jones' cabin. The two other sides, of course, represented the ascending and the descending lines of the bullet's flight."
"The rifle, I deduced from this, must have been sighted to 1,150 yards. "The district attorney consented to take a walk of inspection with me. I explained to him that I wanted to look over the ground; on the way I told him of my theory. He ridiculed the idea, but together we made our way into the swampy bottom of the dried-up rivulet. Suddenly we came upon foot tracks converging toward a single spot from either bank. I stooped and scraped up a few handfuls of earth. After a moment I came upon the rifle barrel."
"When we had disinterred it we found that it was sighted to 1,150 yards."
"That is all, gentlemen. Jones, surprised, made a complete and dramatic confession, and afterward paid the penalty of his crime. But, as I was saying, sentiment has its proper place in law, and if sentiment hadn't led me to undertake young Bright's defense he would have died a shameful death and Lorna Bright would not have been a happy wife for nearly forty years."

BUCHTEL, Mar. 16.—Dry officers, making a moonshine raid on the home of John Rife, miner, found a sad state of affairs. In the four room home were Rife, his wife and their 12 children, all sleeping in five beds. The children range from 22 to 2 years of age. There was hardly a bit of furniture in the house, aside from the beds. The officers found a barrel of mash. The mother sent two of her little daughters to an outbuilding where they got the coils of two stills. Rife told the officials that he had been idle so long he was desperate and started to operate a still to earn money to feed his big family. Some of the youngsters, probably, will be placed in the children's home.

Sentiment and the Law
By DOROTHY WHITCOMB
Copyright, 1932, Western Newspaper Union
"But law and sentiment are the same thing," said Rogers the old corporation lawyer. Somebody had been lamenting the average jurymen's liability to bring in a verdict upon the evidence alone. "Sentiment is law," Rogers repeated. "It is law in its embryonic state, uncrystallized, but often better law than written codes."
"Do any of you remember the Bright murder trial of the late seventies?" he continued, looking round at us. "No? Well, there have been many murders since then, and doubtless it was not of epoch-making importance. Yet I was led to undertake the defense of Howard Bright through sentiment."
"It was pretty Lorna Bright, the cousin of the young man, and secretly engaged to him, who persuaded me, by her protestations of Howard's innocence, to undertake so desperate a case. Old Charles Bright had driven his son from his home, because he preferred the life of a musician."
"Charles Bright was one of those cantankerous old men who are cordially hated by their neighbors. He had a big estate at Lunark, Md., to which he retired after having disposed of the business which he hoped Howard would inherit, at a price of two or three hundred thousands. Among those who hated him most strongly was Pete Jones, a small farmer whose lands he had taken when a mortgage fell due."
"Now we come to the murder. On Thanksgiving eve, 1875, the servants of the old man were aroused by a cry and the sound of a shot. They ran out of the house and saw their master lying dead with a bullet wound through his head. Some fifty yards away stood Howard, a rifle in his hands. He made no resistance and was arrested and duly committed for trial."
"As I said, gentlemen, it was Lorna Bright who insisted that I undertake her cousin's defense. She had been in the house at the time of the murder and had known no more than the servants; yet she was confident that her cousin was guiltless."
"Howard's story was that he had come home on Thanksgiving eve, to seek a reconciliation; that he had brought an old rifle he had taken away, with a view of joining his father duck shooting on the Potomac, a sport to which the old man was very partial, and in which he always used a rifle. When he was within fifty yards of the house, however, he heard a rifle discharged in the distance and saw his father, who had been standing near the door, fall forward dead."
"I was convinced of the young man's innocence by my first interview with him. I assumed that Jones was the guilty man. Jones was at this time living in a cabin about fifteen hundred yards from the site of old Bright's house. There seemed no way in which Jones could be trapped."
"All at once I had an idea. The body had not yet been buried, though the inquest was over. It occurred to me that a bullet fired at such a short range would have had velocity enough to have drilled a clean instead of a jagged hole in the head. I examined the wound and found, not only that the wound was hopelessly torn, so far as measuring its size went, but that, instead of being parallel with the earth, or horizontal, it had a downward angle of some 35 degrees."
"That discovery sent me wild with eagerness. It was easy to deduce from this that the bullet had been fired from a considerable distance. As you doubtless know, gentlemen, at all but point blank ranges the sight on the rifle is elevated, so that the ball, in its trajectory, takes first an upward and then a downward course. In other words, I had here a triangle, one angle of which measured 35 degrees, and the base line, as I surmised, about 1,500 yards—that is to say, the distance between the murdered man and Jones' cabin. The two other sides, of course, represented the ascending and the descending lines of the bullet's flight."
"The rifle, I deduced from this, must have been sighted to 1,150 yards. "The district attorney consented to take a walk of inspection with me. I explained to him that I wanted to look over the ground; on the way I told him of my theory. He ridiculed the idea, but together we made our way into the swampy bottom of the dried-up rivulet. Suddenly we came upon foot tracks converging toward a single spot from either bank. I stooped and scraped up a few handfuls of earth. After a moment I came upon the rifle barrel."
"When we had disinterred it we found that it was sighted to 1,150 yards."
"That is all, gentlemen. Jones, surprised, made a complete and dramatic confession, and afterward paid the penalty of his crime. But, as I was saying, sentiment has its proper place in law, and if sentiment hadn't led me to undertake young Bright's defense he would have died a shameful death and Lorna Bright would not have been a happy wife for nearly forty years."

PADEREWSKI PROPOS'D AS POLAND PRESIDENT
figures representing Germany emptying a bag of gold while an Ambiguous figure, suggestive of the United States greedily grabbed at it with one hand while pushing away a sad-faced person representative of France with the other hand.

SAN FRANCISCO, Mar. 16.—A well defined report is in circulation in Polish circles on the Pacific coast that Paderewski is about to come out of his political retirement and become a candidate for the presidency of Poland at the June elections.
No denial of the report has come from the noted pianist. Dr. G. W. Tape, of Paso Robles, here on a visit was quoted today as stating that Paderewski has refused a million dollar offer from a New York impresario for a concert tour. This was taken to indicate that the great musician has definitely given up his art and indicating that he has something else in mind which will require his time and attention.
That the return of Paderewski is being urged by no less personage than Premier David Lloyd George of Great Britain was the report current here.

Lloyd George Will Stick To His Post

CHINESE SEAMEN WIN IN FIRST EXPERIENCE WITH STRIKE AFTER TWO MONTHS OF BITTER SCRAP

BY HAROLD HAYNES
SEATTLE, Mar. 17.—The strike of Chinese seamen which for two months tied up shipping in Hongkong and other Chinese ports, is reported settled, ending in a complete victory for the sailors.

Beginning in Hongkong, where the seamen first went out, it spread rapidly until practically every craft and guild in that city was affected, including house servants.

Thousands of tons of shipping were tied up. Every ship coming into port carrying a Chinese crew was immediately abandoned by the seamen. Large forces of strike guards were recruited, including many Americans. British troops were called out.

The strike soon spread from Hongkong to Shanghai. Practically all water traffic was tied up. This caused a serious food shortage in Hongkong. Hotels were crowded and householders inconvenienced. The British rulers of Hongkong were concerned over the turn of events.

Many ships coming into Hongkong were unable to discharge their cargoes. The Bay State, a shipping board boat, operated by the Admiral line, and the latest ship to return from the Orient, was forced to leave Hongkong only partially unloaded.

The Bay State left Seattle with a Chinese crew. Labor organizations and the American Legion protested against the hiring of Chinese on the American boats at the time of the departure, but immigration officials passed the crew.

A young Chinese, born and educated in America, who returned on the Bay State, stated there were three chief demands: The abolition of the compradore system (the method of hiring crews thru a labor contracting agency which charges a commission of about one-third the wages made on the job); that all ships and boats running on coastwise and inland waters be manned entirely by Chinese crews from captains to deckhands, and an increase of 40 per cent in wages.

ADOPTION OF FOUR

POWER TREATY NOW
APPEARS CERTAIN

WASHINGTON, Mar. 17.—Slightly more than two thirds of the senate stood ready today to endorse the work of the armament conference. The fight over the four power treaty simmered down considerably today as a result of the unanimous consent for a final vote on ratification on Friday, March 24, which was the direct outcome of negotiations for a compromise entered into by administration leaders with their leading opponents.

Much of the credit for the agreement which virtually terminated the reaction over the pact, and took the edge off the opposition to it, was given to Senator Brandegee, Republican of Connecticut member of the foreign relations committee who first broached it to Borah of Idaho, Johnson of California, La Follette of Wisconsin and Francis of Maryland, the four Republican irreconcilables pitted against the treaty.

Hollow Cheeks,

Men and women—whether you will ever build yourself up to your normal, just-right weight depends on the number of blood-cells in your blood. That's all there is to it. It's a scientific fact. If your blood-cell factory isn't working right, you will be run-down, thin, your blood will be in disorder, and perhaps your face will be broken out with pimples, blackheads and eruptions. S. S. S. keeps your blood-cell factory working full time. It helps build new blood-cells. That's why S. S. S. builds up thin, run-down people. It puts firm flesh on your bones, it rounds out your face, arms, neck, limbs, the whole body. It puts the "pink" in your cheeks. It takes the hollowiness from the eyes, and it fools Father Time by smoothing out wrinkles in men and women by "plumping" them up. S. S. S. is a remarkable blood-purifier. While you are getting plump, your skin eruptions, pimples, blackheads, acne, rheumatism, rash, tetter, blotches are being removed. The medicinal ingredients of S. S. S. are guaranteed purely vegetable. S. S. S. is sold at all drug stores, in two sizes. The larger size is the more economical.

Massillon Woman. Gives Tanlac Full Credit.

"I can say for Tanlac it relieved me in just a month's time of troubles that made my life miserable for ten years," said Mrs. Fannie Mackey, 202 Chestnut St., Massillon, Ohio.

"During all these years I had no appetite and everything I ate hurt me. Often after eating I had a burning sensation like fire in my stomach and was sometimes deathly sick. My liver was sluggish, I was always needing laxatives and I felt miserable all the time. It seems hard to believe that any medicine could do as much as Tanlac has done for me."

"I have just finished my third bottle now and my stomach trouble is all gone and I am able to eat things I hadn't dared touch for years. I sleep better and feel better than I ever expected to again and I am just delighted with the results I have obtained from Tanlac."

Tanlac is sold in Coshocton by Siegrist & Williams and leading druggists everywhere.

leaders opposed to the treaty revealed such little promise of preventing its ratification that it was agreed nothing was to be accomplished by dragging the debate on indefinitely. Senator Brandegee also worked out the compromise reservation to the treaty which President Harding agreed to and which was adopted as a means of breaking the deadlock.

U. M. W. LEADERS WATCH ILLINOIS

CHICAGO, Mar. 17.—Whether the Illinois miners will attempt to negotiate a separate contract with the Illinois coal operators is the paramount question in the United Mine Workers of America. The district convention may be reconvened at once to enable the delegates to decide the question. It is pointed out by leaders of the Illinois miners that unless an agreement is made between the miners and operators of this state there is a danger that the agreement now being negotiated in the southwestern districts may become the basis on which all other agreements must be made. In the past the central competitive field's contracts were the basis from which other agreements were made. The well organized central field has always obtained the most favorable terms.

The International maintains that Illinois has no right to meet the operators unless the operators from Ohio and western Pennsylvania agree to such a conference. This is according to an agreement made by both miners and operators when the present agreement was made two years ago. The conference has twice been called off by International President John L. Lewis because of the refusal of the Ohio and Pennsylvania operators to participate.

On the other hand the Illinois operators have not refused to meet, but instead have demanded a conference and point out that their district agreement with the Illinois mine workers guarantees such a meeting before a strike or suspension of work shall occur.

The government's request that the miners and operators get together to avoid a strike was agreed to at once by the miners but, as in the steel strike, it has been ignored by the operators. The rank and file in the meantime have voted overwhelmingly to strike April 1 if by that time an agreement is not made between their officers and the coal operators.

Unless the sentiment expressed by the rank and file in their referendum is reversed, nothing can prevent a stoppage of work the last of this month. It will be impossible to make a satisfactory settlement within the two remaining weeks. Preparations in Springfield seem to indicate that a strike is expected. A weekly paper is being launched to insure that the public and membership will get the facts confronting the Illinois miners.

ANTHRACITE MINERS SPEED CONFERENCE

NEW YORK, Mar. 17.—Anthracite miners determined today on a program of speeding up the conference for adjustment of the hard coal differences. The call has gone out from international and district leaders to settle down at once to a discussion of the important wage scale issues.

The purpose back of it is to aid the bituminous mine workers in forcing soft coal operators into conferences with the men they now refuse to meet. International President John L. Lewis and Vice President Phil Murray admitted today that a solution of the anthracite problem before April 1 will have a highly beneficial effect upon the bituminous case and place in the hands of the miners a valuable weapon of defense.

ANTWELL'S
SHOES-HOSIERY

Nature Acts as Cupid

By CLAIRE SMITH.

Copyright, 1921, Western Newspaper Union.
"Why don't you an' the Widow Wilson git hitched?" his cronies would ask of William Yoakum at the village store. And Yoakum, with a sudden flash of anger in his blue eyes, would answer:

"I don't go courtin' no women. When they want me let 'em send for me." All of which would duly find its way to the Widow Wilson's ears through the wives of the various auditors of Yoakum's ultimatum. Nevertheless it did seem strange that two old friends should live in chilly isolation upon neighboring ranches. Their children had grown up together and everybody had expected them to get married. Then Wilson had come along and snatched Adeline Farley out of Yoakum's hand—almost literally, for the bus had been announced when the startling news came from Kansas City that the pair were man and wife. Old Farley forgave his daughter and took her home when Wilson deserted his young bride; but Yoakum never got over it.

Yoakum had never married. Gossip averred that he and the widow would soon come together, even though a bitter enmity seemed to rage between them. But Yoakum was proud as well as shy. Thus, when he was twitted, he returned the answer given above.

"I should think, Adeline, that a comparatively young woman like you would think of marrying again," her friends would say, thinking of her neighbor.

"If it's Will Yoakum you're thinking of," Mrs. Wilson answered, "you're all dead wrong. When a man wants to come courtin' me, let him come and ask me. I don't go out of the way to invite any man into my home." "I'll never enter her home until she asks me," was Yoakum's answer, and the two stood pat. Thus matters ran along for a year after Adeline's return.

March came, snowy and blustering. The winds were incessant. Yoakum was harnessing his horse for the first plowing one day when he felt a violent blow on the back of the head. He lapsed into unconsciousness.

He opened his eyes again later, as it seemed, and the first thing that lit upon was the Widow Wilson.

He was lying in bed in a darkened room, and she sat by his side. Her eyes were red from crying. Yoakum endeavored to sit up.

"Hush!" she said, gently pressing him backward. "You have been very ill. You must lie still."

The widow, in his house! Yoakum had often pictured the possibility of such an occurrence, but now, to his surprise, his sensation was one of shame.

"Adeline," he said, timidly, "it all seems like a dream to me."

Adeline was silent, but he could see that she, too, was moved.

"It seems as though we hadn't been parted these five and twenty years, Adeline," he resumed.

"Why did you marry Wilson, dear?" asked the man.

"I guess because I was a fool, Will," she answered.

"And you couldn't manage to care for me just the least bit, could you, Adeline?" he asked.

The widow was tracing out the pattern upon the counterpane. "Why wouldn't you come to see me?" she asked, suddenly.

"I guess for the same reason that you married Wilson," he answered.

"I'm stubborn, as you are. But I'm sorry. And when I think that it was you who gave in and came to me, it just makes me feel cheap. Did they get the robbers?"

"Robbers? What robbers?" asked Adeline, looking at him curiously.

"Where do you think you are, Will?" inquired the Widow Wilson.

"Why, at home, of course," he answered. "Where else should I be? But I see you've changed the furniture round, haven't you?"

The Widow Wilson was laughing and crying hysterically. Yoakum looked at her in wonder.

"Don't you know that when our fathers built their homes they made them both the same and got the same kind of furniture?" she asked when she had recovered her self-possession.

"You mean—that I'm in your house, Adeline?" he cried. "Who brought me here?"

"You brought yourself, my dear, yesterday morning. There weren't any robbers, Will. It was a cyclone. Picked you up from your plow and carried you nicely through the air and plunked you down beside me on a bed of hay I'd pulled down for Beesie and her calf. If that plow hadn't toppled over on your head—"

But the Widow Wilson did not have a chance to finish just then for William Yoakum had caught her in his arms with surprising strength for a sick man to show; and you can't talk when you are being kissed, they say.

FORMER COSHOCTON MAN IS CRITICALLY ILL IN NEW JERSEY

Harold E. Bechtol, formerly of Coshocton, was critically ill at his home in Passaic, New Jersey, Friday, according to word received by his cousin W. J. Beall, Friday morning.

The message was received from W. W. Bechtol, father of Harold, who is at the present time visiting another son Arthur, in Portland, Ore.

The father is planning to go to the bedside of his son immediately, according to the message.

Harold Bechtol was formerly a news writer in Coshocton and Cleveland. He has been in charge of the New York office of the Newspaper Enterprise Association, of Cleveland, for several months.

These Modern Children.

When the Woman week-ends at Mary's house she is awakened at seven by a small figure in pajamas demanding stories. Last Sunday in that period between sleep and waking the Woman dug "Cinderella" from her subconscious mind. She placed under emphasis on the predicament of poor Cinderella with no coach in which to go to the ball, thinking that Mary's imagination would be stimulated by the clever way in which the fairy godmother had overcome the difficulty. But the Woman had forgotten her psychology and disregarded the practical experience of the Modern Child! Mary was politely silent until the last rat had turned into a footman and mounted the box. Then she opened her brown eyes wide, removed her thumb from her mouth and said: "Why didn't she call a taxi?"—New York Sun.

BIGGEST SMUGGLING CONSPIRACY BARING SINCE PROHIBITION

NEW YORK, Mar. 17.—Four thousand cases of imported whiskey valued at $500,000, a two-masted schooner, a big moving van, two touring cars and 24 prisoners were seized early today by the special service squad of the customs service in a spectacular raid on an abandoned pier at the foot of east Tiffanyst, the Bronx.

Several shots were fired in a 20 minute rough-and-tumble fight between the raiders and the combined crews of the ship and the automobiles. It is the biggest single seizure made by the authorities since prohibition went into effect here.

The boat is of the kind known as the Viking, and has long been sought as a rum runner. The name "Clara" was substituted. The "Viking's" home port is Gloucester, Mass. The captain gave the name of John Johnson, but was declared by the authorities to be David Helferson the regular captain of the ship. The customs men believe that the abandoned old pier has long been used as a landing place for smuggled liquor and think they nipped one of the biggest smuggling conspiracies uncovered since prohibition went into effect here.

National Holidays.
Those who dislike work should dwell in Turkey and avoid Scotland, for those two countries are at the top and bottom respectively in the list of the countries of the world as regards public holidays. Turkey has 26 official holidays in the year, while thrifty Scotland has only five. Italy celebrates 23 general public holidays; Germany, 20; France, 18; Great Britain, 16; Japan, 15, and Portugal, eight.

Not only are we depending upon publicity to get the campaign news before the people, but to each and every individual when the opportunity presents itself.

Of course you are all very eager to learn more about our annual Y. While all the captains of the various teams haven't announced all their workers, everybody is entering into the spirit and we are sure of success. At a meeting of the publicity committee last evening, extensive plans were formulated by the members. Our idea is to present the facts to the people, giving them a clear understanding of the necessity of maintaining such an organization as our own, which is a part of the great National Y. W. C. A. It is for the GIRLS of our own Coshocton. Let's boost it.

Mrs. Frank Pomerene, chairman of the General committee, has called a meeting of the different captains and their solicitors of the women's division for Saturday evening, at 7:00 o'clock, in the Association rooms. It is especially necessary that each and

A Close Call

FREEDOM of that in Kentucky in 1922 has been saved by a score of 41 to 42. That is the vote by which the bill to prohibit the teaching of Darwinism, "or evolution as it pertains to the origin of man," in the public schools and universities of the State was defeated in the lower chamber of the Legislature.

That the propagation of an academic theory, without which the teaching of modern science would be absurdly incomplete, could come so near to suppression in the present era is symptomatic of a tendency of the times—the tendency of intolerance and of Legislatures to become the tools of intolerance.

Even the academic freedom had so close a call in Kentucky, it is still unbelievable that in states which have been blessed with better educational opportunities and are less susceptible to the Bryanistic idea of reform so near a reversion to the medieval inquisition would be possible. It is the decadence of Legislatures rather than the decay of intelligence which is represented in the Kentucky anti-evolution farce.

Leader Or Servant?

MR. HARDING, it seems, is not in Florida solely for rest. His absence from Washington, with such critical affairs in the balance as the arms conference treaties and the bonus legislation, the ostensibly vacation, has a graver purpose. The President, according to rumors from the South, resents the assumption of Congress that he is a wavering, easily influenced person who will yield to whatever demand Congress makes. The situation, it appears, has been brot to a climax by Mr. Fordney's conduct in going confidently ahead with a bonus measure which the President could sign only at the humiliation of reversing himself.

In short, the President is confronted with the problem of determining what his attitude towards Congress must be. In graciousness and urbanity he has not failed, but the policy itself seemingly has failed. Must he turn about face? Must he lay aside tact and take the initiative? Where must the administration's leadership lie—in the executive department or in Congress? Must Mr. Harding personally seize the reins and do the driving or must he yield to Congress and suffer the verdict of weakness?

The experience of his immediate predecessor may admonish Mr. Harding against infringing upon the prerogatives of the legislative department, but if he is as familiar with American history as he should be he must realize that much of the criticism of Mr. Wilson was insincere, partisan strategy. His knowledge of American history leaves no doubt as to the choice he must make if his administration is to be a success and he himself is to be accounted among the strong men of the White House line.

He should be the leader of Congress, not the servant.

Are Wages Too High?

INTELLIGENT consideration of wage questions has been immemorially difficult. No commonly accepted standards have been available. Supply and demand have composed the only generally acknowledged rule, and that is conscienceless. Wage changes have, moreover, been illusory. Money is itself a commodity, and the buying power varies greatly. The last quarter of a century has been a period of rising prices or of falling money. Consequently the wage increases recorded during this period have in many cases been nominal rather than real.

Important information upon this subject has been assembled by Basil M. Manly, formerly joint chairman of the National War Labor Board and now director of the People's Legislative Service. Mr. Manly offers three standards for judging wages. These are the relation of wages to price changes, the minimum sum required to support a family of average size in health and reasonable comfort, and national productivity. These are fair tests. Every one who considers the question from the public standpoint at once clings to the cost of living as an axiomatic standard, and yet it has never been realized.

The United States census figures were searched to show the changes. The average earnings of an American factory employee in 1899 were $425. By 1919 the average wage was $1,159. This was a very marked increase so far as dollars were concerned. In buying power, according to Mr. Manly, the average worker had, however, suffered a reduction rather than an increase. His 1919 wage measured in 1899 dollars was worth only $420, or $6 less than he had been paid a score of years previously. A similar conclusion was reached concerning the wages of union labor. For every dollar in buying power which union labor was paid in 1907 only 94 cents were obtained in 1921.

These findings have been confirmed by other inquiries. In one of his early speeches President Harding laid down the rule that the lowest wage must be sufficient to provide the necessary cost of living. As things now stand there is a gulf between that political principle and economic fact. If Mr. Harding or any of his successors discovers a way of bridging the gulf he will win enduring fame.

New York Day-By-Day

By O. O. MCINTYRE

NEW YORK, Mar. 17.—Thoughts while strolling around New York. A flock of Harlem lunch wagons moving to night stands. Distinctive silhouette of Williamsburg bridge. Third Avenue. A curious crowd elbowed in front of an undertaking parlor. Protocative young Greek girls with marble white flesh and flashing black eyes. Hard, peck-marked men. And strapping lads from river boats. Elevated pillars like ghostly sentinels in the fog.

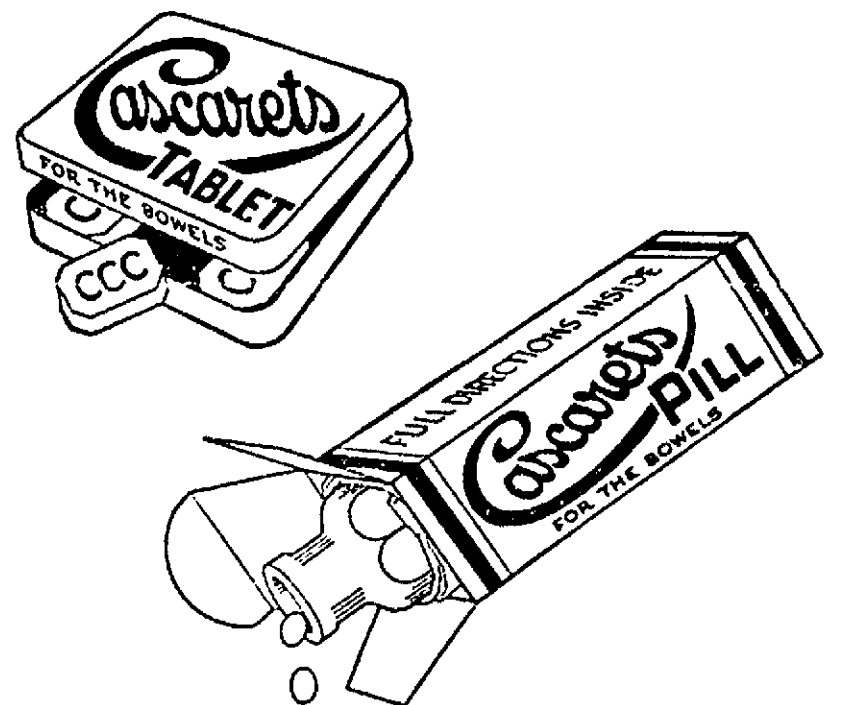

The chummy shops flaunt their oil skin coats. Here's the little cafe where Owon Kildare the Bowery poet, loafed and wrote. Policemen patrol the beats in pairs. "Ganging the cop" a favorite sport over here. Flooded old women in stuffy lamp-lit flats—rocking and rocking. While the heavens weep.

Fat wives of pawn brokers knitting in sheltered doorways. Mercury lighted cafeterias a-clatter with noise. Every few moments a racing, clanging ambulance. Russian moultke trying to be citizens. Voices ragged and ironical—mostly pitched in derision. More rain. Now for home, the lounging robe, slippers and a volume of Thorsau.

Broadway wonders what has become of the Old Brigade at the cocktail hour. For years these regulars perambulated the absentee route at 4 o'clock. Under Old King Cole at the Knickerbocker bar the smartly dressed men of boulevardian cosmopolitanism were 10 rows deep and the first row passed back the cocktails from the bar to the thirsty. Now they are never seen in these plucked times of drouth. Five o'clock is the hour only for flappers and cake eaters. The Old Brigade has vanished. One wonders if they are lined up against the counters of those chain lunch counters devouring pastry—for these new fangled places are crowded at that hour. The other night one of the Old Brigade was ruminating over the times at his club. "Boys" he said "do you remember that never-to-be-forgotten line: 'This will be the last, gentlemen, we close at one?'"

The barbers on Madison and Park Avenue who have been charging $5 to bob hair have found a sudden slump in business. Bobbed hair has not gone out of fashion but many devotees of this style fear for the worst so they are permitting their hair to grow out again and are wearing wigs of bobbed hair. Wig-makers are being swamped with orders and most of them are for the henna color. A lot of women who aspire to the Titian tint now have their opportunity without dyeing their locks and when the bobbed hair craze dies they can slip naturally back into their natural shade.

Lonsinger was unable to find her way out of the cellar for a few moments. The report of the explosion immediately called the members of the family to the scene, when Mrs. Lonsinger could be seen on the cellar steps, with lower portions of her clothing burning, throwing flames up over her head. She was promptly rescued and emerged in the spring which was located only a few feet away. This was the only remedy to save her from serious and painful burns, possibly from death. Dr. J. E. Hahn, was called to administer relief from burns received on lower portion of limbs.
